

Fifth Body Paragraph: Discuss point #2 of the second subject, providing similarities and differences with point #2 of the first subject.	Example: Safeway does not have as wide a selection of organic produce as Whole Foods. Instead, the majority of its produce is grown with pesticides and hormones.
Sixth Body Paragraph: Discuss point #3 of the second subject, providing similarities and differences with point #3 of the first subject.	Example: Safeway offers few natural remedies. Instead, Safeway has a large selection of over-the-counter drugs in addition to a pharmacy that sells medications manufactured by pharmaceutical companies.
Conclusion: Without repeating any claims or adding any new information, emphasize the importance of the similarities and differences between the two subjects as they are relevant to your thesis.	Example: With its wholesome products, Whole Foods is surely a healthier place to shop than Safeway.

This organizational pattern is most effective when used on longer essays, such as a comparison of two articles, novels, or short stories. The body of such an essay is organized by discussing one point at a time and how it applies to each subject before moving on to the next point. For longer works, at least one paragraph should be devoted to each point.
